

Title: The Networks of How Genes Regulate Other Genes

Abstract: Genes regulate the output of other genes in complex interactions. What is the architecture of these regulatory networks? New technologies, such as cDNA microarray chips can now measure the mRNA output of thousands of genes. We can analyze this data by modeling genetic regulatory networks, including those with random and "small world" connectivities, and comparing those results to experimental data.